Story

The Fox King has hired you to reclaim the Castle's stolen Diamonds from the three Witch Sisters; Dezravella, Petrichora, and Ravanna. His emissary explains that the sisters have scattered the missing Diamonds across the magical worlds contained inside each of the Castle's many Paintings. As you begin your journey by tracking down Dezravella, a Dragon Riding Fire Witch, you discover that not all is as it seems, and there may very well be two sides to this story. It is up to you to choose right and wrong: Whether you ought to fight the Witch Sisters and collect Diamonds for the Fox King, or to break oath and help Ravanna restore peace to those worlds the Diamonds have been taken from.

A vr homage to the platformers of old. I played utilizing the standing settings and had no problems with motion sickness.. The game appears well constructed. The visual assets are a bit clunky, but overall nicely done. Signs are relatively easy to read, the controls are easy to learn, and the audio is cute. Play is a little bit simplistic but I admit I wasn't able to get deeper than beyond the tutorial and finding the first yellow diamond due to VR sickness.

If you don't get VR sickness, you might like this one. It brings back fond memories of StarFox and I really liked the level exploration concepts. If you do get VR sickness, Gem Hunter may set you off in under 3 seconds.. This is a really fun game that I think people are missing out on due to not having fancy graphics.

Firstly, the sheer amount of content you're getting is great for VR. Secondly, the controls and ship mechanics are solid. Third, the comfort options are awesome. The biggest issue in VR right now is shallow/poorly programmed games, and I would say that Gem Hunter is an example of a well programmed game with lots of passion and nostalgia for Super Mario 64 behind it.
